FRANCE URGES TOUGHER PILOT CHECKS AFTER GERMANWINGS CRASH

French investigators have recommended tougher medical checks for pilots after uncovering fresh evidence of unreported concerns over the mental state of a German pilot who crashed his jet into the Alps last year, killing all 150 people on board. France's BEA air accident investigation agency said a doctor consulted by Germanwings co-pilot Andreas Lubitz had recommended two weeks before the disaster that he should be treated in a psychiatric hospital. The unidentified private physician was one of a number of doctors seen by the 27-year-old as he wrestled with symptoms of a "psychotic depressive episode" that started in December 2014 and may have lasted until the day of the crash, it said. SIXTEEN DEAD IN IVORY COAST RESORT TOWN ATTACK, POLICE SOURCE SAYS

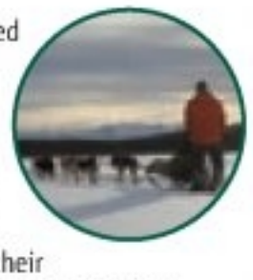
2 At least 16 people including four Europeans were killed on Sunday when gunmen opened fire on beachgoers at a resort town in Ivory Coast, a officer from the national police said. "For the moment, we have a total of 12 dead, including four Europeans. ... We don't know yet if there are others. We are doing clean-up operations right now," the officer told security forces during a briefing attended by a Reuters reporter. REUTERS

SLED DOG KILLED IN SNOWMOBILE 'ATTACKS' AT ALASKA'S IDITAROD



3 Alaska State Troopers on Saturday arrested a 26-year-old man in connection with attacks on two musher teams taking part in the Iditarod dog sled race that killed at least one dog and injured three others. Two veteran mushers in Alaska's Iditarod told race officials on Saturday that a person driving a snowmobile tried to drive the machine into their sled teams in apparent attacks. Alaska State Troopers said they arrested Arnold Demoski in connection with the incidents, which occurred about 12 miles from the Nulato checkpoint, about 582 miles into this year's 975-mile course. A dog belonging to four-time champion Jeff King was killed when his team was hit from behind by a snowmobile, and two of his other dogs were injured, the Iditarod Trail Committee said in a statement on its website. BOLARIS' WEATHER WATCH: NORTHEAST CAN EXPECT RAIN, WIND EARLY WEEK

Wow, that was quite the summer tease by Mother Nature last week as temperatures passed spring levels and jumped right into summertime readings. Quite a few places hit 80 degrees in the Mid-Atlantic and right here in the Northeast, with the exception of all coastal sections as the big, bad chilly Atlantic kept the thermometer 20 to 25 degrees cooler there.

Well, it's Monday and it's back to reality as chilly rains will continue to spread up and through the Northeast as readings remain mainly in the chilly 40s. A stiff easterly wind will turn umbrellas inside out and minor coastal flooding will take place from the Jersey shore to the Capes of New England.

Things will turn around in a big way by Wednesday with a return to sunshine along with much milder temperatures.

Spring arrives at 12:30 a.m. on March 20.

Ah, not so fast. As you look at your phone and check your weather for the next 10 days you will see there is no mention of snow, and it could turn out to be correct, but it could also turn out to be in error. Most computerized digital weather data that is generated on your electronic device is just a pure regurgitation of exactly what the computer models are spewing out, but without any human interpretation.

Now I do pride myself on long-range trends, and if you read my column last week, I expressed some concern starting around March 22, and that still holds true, but I'm moving up the date to March 20-21, just as spring arrives.

Tendencies exist for a significant to major coastal storm to take shape somewhere along the Mid-Atlantic coast with the funneling of cold air aloft, that could get pulled down creating an environment cold enough for heavy, wet snow for parts of the Northeast. Odds would favor a cold rain for Philly, NYC and Boston, but it's not out of the question for some mixing of snow or a changeover to snow along the I95 corridor. Now with all this being said, it's far from a certainty as "the possible event" is still about a week away. Looking at the major atmospheric signals that help in forecasting East Coast storms (arctic oscillation and North Atlantic oscillation) are hugely split, meaning a low confidence forecast at this time. However, it still needs to be watched, and whether this turns out to be fact or fiction, only time will tell.

This week at a glance

Rainy days and Monday always get me down; welcome back to March as reality bites. A cold rain today, stiff wind, and chilly with a high of 45. Rain will continue through the night.

Tuesday: You might wake up in a fog, otherwise light rain and drizzle ending by afternoon. High of 55.

Wednesday: Getting over the hump on a good note as sunshine returns. High of 68.

Thursday: We need to get a little luck of the Irish as we have showers in the forecast and a high of 62.

Friday: More showers and temps in the 50s. (Wet snow showers in the Poconos.)

Spring arrives at 12:30 a.m. on March 20. Watching for the potential of an East Coast storm for Sunday and Monday with the chance of rain and wet snow.

Senator defends bill that would benefit his private business

State Sen. Robert "Tommy" Tomlinson claims the hubbub over SB 874 is all a bunch of baloney.

JENNY DEHUFF
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

A bill that would effect funeral homes and cemetery merchandise is working its way through the Pennsylvania General Assembly and critics are clamoring it should have been dead on arrival.

Senate Bill 874, sponsored by state Sen. Robert "Tommy" Tomlinson, a Republican and chair of the state's Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure Committee, would allow people close to death to put additional money into a trust fund to pay for their own funerals, or for a loved one, in advance.

Tomlinson is also owner and director of Tomlinson Funeral Home in Bensalem, which he inherited from his father, who opened it in the 1940s.

Some say Tomlinson's role as chairman of the Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure Committee as well as his ownership in the funeral home is putting his two jobs in conflict, because he stands to gain if SB 874 gets passed.

PA.GOV

A story in the Allentown Morning Call reported that, under the current system, cemeteries can pre-sell caskets and vaults and increase their bottom line by claiming they have already delivered the product to the buyer.

Funeral homes turn a profit by selling caskets and other merchandise at the time of someone's death. Sales made from preplanned funerals only make up a portion of the revenue, and critics argue Tomlinson is only trying to up those figures and thus pad his pocketbook.

"This is about protecting the consumer in the future," said Tomlinson, in defending his bill.

"This is what the law says today. I'm having a hard time understanding such an outcry on this. When you sell a premade vault or casket and they say they're delivering it, that's the controversy. You're supposed to put 70 percent in a trust so there's money to do the delivery.

"If you spend all the money at the [time of] sale, then there's no money left over for the delivery. It's the law now — and most cemeteries — this is what they do. I have no advantage."

Despite no documented consumer complaints, Tomlinson's committee and the Senate have approved SB 874.

The cemetery operator who is fighting Tomlinson the hardest on this bill is StoneMor, based out of Levittown, which owns more than 300 cemeteries and more than 100 funeral homes in 28 states.

"This is hardly consumer protection. It's a clear conflict of interest that threatens to greatly increase the cost of burials for Pennsylvania families," StoneMor CEO Larry Miller told Metro. "This is an incredible abuse of power. ... This is why people simply don't trust government today."

Several months ago, the Federal Trade Commission addressed this issue by submitting written statements to state Rep. Robert Godshall, in response to his request for the FTC's views on the legislative proposal that would further regulate the pre-need sale of cemetery and funeral merchandise and services in Pennsylvania.

"The bills, if enacted, appear to impose additional restrictions and requirements on cemeteries that engage in the pre-need sale of cemetery goods," the statement reads.

"These provisions could lessen competition, resulting in potentially higher prices and fewer options for consumers, without countervailing benefits to consumers."

But Tomlinson said his bill passed out of the Senate with bipartisan support.

Santora said he expects a vote this month in the House and for it to soon reach the governor's desk.

Man dies after apparent random stabbing in Rittenhouse Square

Police were searching for a suspect in a fatal stabbing in Rittenhouse Square on Sunday morning, CBS Philly reported.

The apparently random attack happened outside a luxury building on the 1800 block of Rittenhouse Square in Center City around 3 a.m.

Police said a group of friends were out on the town for an early St. Patrick's Day celebration when they were approached by a man wearing a New Jersey Devils cap, according to ABC Philly.

The man, who witnesses said appeared "deranged," asked the victim if he was a Philadelphia Flyers fan, then pulled out a knife and stabbed him at least once in the abdomen, ABC Philly reported

The attacker then fled the scene and the unidentified 24-year-old victim was taken to Hahnemann Hospital where he died.

Police are currently investigating the incident and have not released any details regarding the suspect. MATTHEW LEE

TreePhilly offers up Philly Eagle to plant 'Bud the Tree'

The time has come for Spring 2016 TreePhilly Yard Tree Giveaway.

JENNY DEHUFF
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

With a convincing enough pitch, one lucky Philadelphia family will have Philadelphia Eagles defensive end Connor Barwin personally plant "Bud the Tree" in their backyard, thanks to the Spring 2016 TreePhilly Yard Tree Giveaway.

Registration is now open for property owners to obtain large shade trees, small flowering trees and fruit trees through the TreePhilly Yard Tree Giveaway, sponsored by Philadelphia Parks & Recreation, Fairmount Park Conservancy and TD Bank.

"My goal, obviously, is to make the Eagles the best football team in the country, but I mean it when I say I want to make Philadelphia the best city in the country, and to do that, we need to make it the greenest city in the country," Barwin said Friday in Rittenhouse Square.

"I'm going to be personally planting Bud the Tree here in somebody's backyard. It's a simple social media contest. Just go on Twitter, Instagram, post why you need a tree in your back yard. We'll pick a winner. Use the hashtag '#phillytreetrek.' Tell us why you need the tree, and we'll pick a winner sometime in the next couple of months and I'll put this tree in your back yard and plant it."

Parks and Recreation Commission Executive Director Kathryn Ott-Lovell said that since the city started the tree giveaway program, it's distributed 12,000 trees throughout Philadelphia. It serves two purposes. The first is to educate Philadelphians about the importance of trees. The second is to dispel any tree myths folks might have about what damages trees could do to their property or to their utility lines.

"It's really about promoting the wonderful things that trees can do for our city, and the urgent need we have to increase the city's tree canopy and to protect our urban forest," Ott-Lovell said.

Registration is open now through April 10.

Tortured dead puppy found abandoned in Willow Grove

Upper Dublin Township police are asking for the community's help after a tortured dead puppy was found abandoned in a crate.

Police said they found the six-month to one-year-old pit bull terrier in an area near Welsh Road near Blair Mill Road in Willow Grove on Wednesday. "She was discovered inside a metal cage which was had been wrapped in plastic and sealed with tape," police wrote in a Facebook post. "Pieces of drywall were used as the bedding for the crate."

Police have asked anyone with information regarding this investigation to contact the UDPD Detective Division at 215-646-2101.

The puppy was discovered in this crate. UPPER DUBLIN TOWNSHIP PD

5 THINGS YOU CAN DO TO AVOID COMMON BACK INJURIES AT WORK

Back injuries are the most common work injuries reported in PA. Even routine office work can cause or worsen back pain. Follow these simple steps to keep your back injury-free.

#1 Include physical activity in your daily routine. Exercise helps to strengthen muscles.

#2 Watch your posture. Slouching is bad for your back.

#3 Listen to your body. If you feel fatigue or pain, don't ignore it.

#4 Change up repetitive tasks. Avoid the same movements over and over, or the same continuous strenuous activity for your back.

#5 Lift correctly. If you must lift something heavy, use your legs and core muscles —don't bend over and just use your back.

If you sustained a back or other injury on the job,

SXSW apologizes after Muslim Olympian told to remove hijab

Organizers of the South by Southwest (SXSW) arts festival said on Sunday they apologized to U.S. Olympian Ibtihaj Muhammad after a volunteer said she must remove her Muslim head covering to receive credentials to the event in Austin, Texas.

The Olympic fencer was picking up an identification badge at the interactive, film and music event on Saturday when a volunteer told her she must take off her hijab before her photograph could be taken.

"Even after I explained it was for religious reasons, he insisted I had to remove my hijab," she said on Twitter.

SXSW organizers said on Sunday in an email to Reuters that they have since removed the volunteer for the duration of the event.

Ibtihaj Muhammad GETTY IMAGES

"We are embarrassed by this and have apologized to Ibtihaj in person, and sincerely regret this incident," SXSW said in the statement.

Muhammad, 30, will make history in Rio de Janeiro as the first Olympian to represent the United States wearing a hijab. Muhammad has become an outspoken critic of presidential candidate Donald Trump, who called for a ban on Muslims from entering the United States.

"I feel like I owe it to people who look like me to speak out," Muhammad told reporters on Wednesday. "When I hear someone say something like, 'We're going to send Muslims back to their countries,' I say, 'Well, I'm American. Where am I going to go?"

After the incident was resolved at the event, Muhammad said that she was issued the wrong identification.

"I was given the wrong ID! From now on my name is Tamir & I work for Time Warner Inc" she tweeted. REUTERS

Trump digs in after weekend violence

Trump used a round of television appearances to beat back furious criticism that he was encouraging discord with divisive language disparaging Muslims and immigrants.

Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump refused to take responsibility on Sunday for clashes that have erupted at his campaign events, saying he was not inciting violence but giving voice to the anger of his supporters.

"I don't accept responsibility. I do not condone violence in any shape," Trump said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

The tension at his rallies, Trump said, came from people being "sick and tired" of American leadership that has cost them jobs through international trade deals, failed to defeat Islamic State terrorism and treats military veterans poorly.

"The people are angry at that — they're not angry about something I'm saying. I'm just the messenger," Trump said.

Trump, front-runner for the Republican nomination, appeared unchastened after simmering tensions between his supporters and protesters angry over his positions on immigration and Muslims erupted Friday night, forcing him to cancel a Chicago rally and casting a shadow over his campaign appearances on Saturday.

The scenes in Chicago followed several weeks of violence at Trump rallies, in which protesters and journalists have been punched, tackled and hustled out of venues, raising concerns about security heading into the Nov. 8 presidential election to replace Democratic President Barack Obama. REUTERS

BEAR WARNING!

TOM FOREMAN

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the new book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

You know those movies where the frightened campers realize far too late they must work together to escape the grizzly? Yea, that's pretty much the Republicans right now, and this week the biggest bruin, Donald Trump, could effectively polish off the last of them — which leads my three things to watch in politics.

1. LAIR OF THE SWAMP BEAR: Tuesday is last-stand time for Marco Rubio in Florida — heck, maybe for the Republican Party as we know it. Just a few months ago, Rubio thought his home state primary might clinch the nomination for him. Instead he is desperately trying to avoid a mauling by Trump on his own patio. At stake: 99 winner-take-all delegates. If Rubio snags them, he'll still be in a distant third place, but at least he'd have done his part to repel Trump's charge. On the other hand, if Rubio loses on his own turf, the screams for him to drop out will be enough to make a politico's blood run cold.

2. BUCKEYE BEAR: If Florida can't do the job, maybe Ohio can. Gov. John Kasich represents the second hope on Tuesday for the Republican establishment to stop Trump. Kasich is far down in the delegate count, but if he can collect Ohio's 66 winner-take-all delegates, that too could slow Trump's rush to secure the nomination. Ted Cruz, by the way, already burned his powder in his home state of Texas. He may be able to rack up more delegates, but if Trump takes a big enough bite on Tuesday, the math says the man from New York may be unstoppable.

3. BEARING UP: And what about the Democrats? Like one of those apocryphal stories Scout masters tell Webelos, Hillary Clinton has taken a pickaxe handle to Bernie Sanders over and over and he just keeps coming. Sanders' Michigan surprise left Camp Clinton reeling, and all that talk of inevitability is gone — especially if you look at just the pledged delegates. It doesn't help that she is still wrestling with email issues, and the Dem base is jittery about her strength. She will keep trying to turn the attention toward her potential Republican opponent this week, but Sanders is showing sharper claws every day and she dare not turn her back on him, or he may shred her tent and make off with her cooler.

US police escape federal charges in 96 percent of rights cases: newspaper

Federal prosecutors declined to bring charges against law enforcement officers in the United States facing allegations of civil rights violations in 96 percent of such cases between 1995 and 2015, according to an investigation by the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review.

The newspaper examined nearly 3 million Justice Department records related to how the department's 94 U.S. attorney's offices across the country, and in U.S. territories including Puerto Rico, handled civil rights cases against officers.

The data included cases referred to the Justice Department by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other agencies, as well as investigations that prosecutors opened on their own.

A demonstrator GETTY IMAGES

Overall, prosecutors turned down 12,703 potential civil rights violations out of 13,233 total complaints. By contrast, prosecutors rejected only about 23 percent of referrals in all other types of criminal cases, the newspaper said.

The report comes just days after the U.S. attorney in Manhattan, Preet Bharara, announced he would not press charges against a white officer who killed an unarmed black teenager inside his own apartment in 2012.

The most common reasons that prosecutors cited for declining to bring civil rights cases against officers were weak or insufficient evidence, lack of criminal intent and orders from the Justice Department, according to the Tribune-Review.

The standard for bringing a federal civil rights case is much more stringent than that of a typical police misconduct case brought at the state level. Federal prosecutors must prove that an officer acted "willfully" in depriving someone of his or her rights, rather than simply negligently or recklessly.

A Justice Department spokeswoman, Dena Iverson, told the Tribune-Review that the agency takes "any allegation of law enforcement misconduct seriously and will review those allegations when they are brought to our attention." REUTERS

Car bomb in Turkish capital Ankara, 32 killed, 75 injured

Police work at the site of a blast in Ankara on Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

A car bomb killed 27 people in the heart of the Turkish capital Ankara on Sunday and wounded 75 more, the governor's office said, less than a month after a similar attack killed 32 people just blocks away.

Video footage showed burning debris showering down on what appeared to be the entrance to an underpass. The blast could be heard 1.5 miles away and a large cloud of smoke could be seen rising over the city centre, a Reuters witness said.

A senior security official told Reuters that the blast appeared to have been caused by a suicide car bomb. A second security official said gunfire was heard after the blast. Initial findings suggest the attack was carried out by Kurdish militant PKK or affiliated group, according to a Turkish security official.

The area, close to a courthouse and the Justice and Interior Ministries, was crowded when the explosion happened at 6:43 p.m., state broadcaster TRT said.

TRT said a vehicle had exploded at a major transport hub, hitting a bus carrying some 20 people near the central Guven Park and Kizilay Square.

The government has said the previous car bombing in Ankara on Feb. 17 was carried out by Kurdish militants. That attack struck near Turkey's military headquarters, parliament and other key government institutions.

Islamic State militants have meanwhile carried out at least four bomb attacks on Turkey since June 2015. Local jihadist groups and leftist radicals have also staged attacks in the NATO member country in the past. REUTERS

Jennifer Aniston and Justin Theroux on those rocks again

So how are Jennifer Aniston and Justin Theroux adjusting to married life a year in? Not so well, if In Touch is to be believed. Apparently the pair are "living separate lives" and have put their adoption plans on hold. "Justin's apathetic when it comes to marriage," a source says. "He's a guy who was meant to be single. Jen's starting to realize that, too." According to the source, Aniston and Theroux "remain at complete odds over everything, from how much time they spend together to where they should live. She loves L.A., he'll take Manhattan." And that's not all: "She and Justin were halfway through the process of adopting twins — a boy and a girl — and were hoping to bring the kids home in the next couple of months, but their plans came to a halt when they started having problems," the source adds. "She'd even built a nursery in her Bel Air home." It looks like there's at least one thing marriage didn't change: We still have near-constant rumors that they're on the outs.

Kris Jenner just wants to be liked

Guys, should we be worried about Kris Jenner? Because apparently she's not feeling too great about life and stuff, and it's because nobody likes her no matter how much money she spends trying to make people like her. Or at least that's the spin I'm getting on it from Radar Online. "She's been a train wreck waiting to happen for months, pushing herself to the limit while overindulging on her vices the whole time," a source warns. "Kris is her own worst enemy, she's constantly on this quest to push herself to the next level and make more money while controlling everyone around her. Plus, it burns her so badly that she can't buy popularity, however hard she tries." The last straw? Apparently she got booed off the stage at a concert — which can't be good for anyone's ego — an incident that has Jenner "now constantly crying that 'everybody hates me,'" the source says. "Everyone fears it will prove the catalyst for a full-blown meltdown." Should be good for ratings, though, right?

Hillary campaign ad

"Saturday Night Live" knows how Hillary Clinton can appeal to the millennial voters who aren't quite on her side: by literally turning into Bernie Sanders. In this deftly made faux-campaign ad, Clinton (Kate McKinnon) does exactly that, her Hillary impression morphing seamlessly into a Bernie impression. "I'm whoever you want me to be, and I approve this message," she offers, desperately. Hey, whatever works.

Ben Affleck's mom not feeling Jennifer Garner's interview

Jennifer Garner got herself on the cover of Vanity Fair, opening up about her split from Ben Affleck, how she's coping and what she thinks of his tacky back tattoo. And Affleck's mom, Christine Anne Boldt, isn't happy about what her ex-daughter-in-law has been saying. "Chrissie's really devastated by this and worries that Jen's getting caught up in the fame game again and going for headlines by throwing Ben under the bus," a source says, according to Star magazine. Boldt is apparently peeved because the interview comes on the heels of "Jen making a promise to both of them that she'd protect Ben's image no matter what," the source adds. "Yet here she is talking about the nanny affair and how she tried to make it work."

Singer-songwriter Pete Yorn is back with his sixth studio album. JIM WRIGHT

But Pete Yorn can still get inside your head.

CHRIS CAESAR
@ChrisCaesar
letters@metro.us

It's been six years since Pete Yorn released a solo record, and 10 years since the multi-instrumentalist decided to forgo a studio band and handle the heavy-lifting himself.

While Yorn's tackled other projects in between, he tells us he felt called back to explore the methods that informed his earlier albums. His sixth full-length album, "Arranging Time," came out last Friday from Capitol. Yorn, who kicks off the U.S. leg of his tour in New York on March 15, chats with us about his new album, looking backward and staying present.

What inspired you to hop back into the recording studio?

I just had some music in me that needed to get out, you know? At the end of the day, that's what I do. I was involved in music during that period, like with my other band, The Olms, and I was definitely exploring stuff, but at some point I just felt like I wanted to make a solo record and play mostly by myself. It's just a natural cycle that kind of comes around. I hadn't done it in a few records and it just felt like, yeah, I kinda want to do this again.

You released the first album's first single "Summer Was a Day" back in November, and on Facebook you wrote that working with [producer] R. Walt Vincent again was like "creating fresh new material that felt like a furthering of a conversation we had started back in 2001." I know a lot of your music deals with personal growth and change; this album in particular is about time changing quickly. What kind of conversation were you having when you made your first record, and how is it different 15 years later?

I was like 25 when I made the first record, and I had my experiences up to that point as a person. I haven't changed so much what I think I am writing about, I think tons of people write about love, loss, regret, anxiety, guilt, desire, and all that s—t goes into my songs. And I'm always kind of examining that as a human being: examining it in myself, people around me, popular culture, movies anything I see. Now I'm able to approach songwriting and that process with new eyes. I do want to be clear: going back to work with Walt Vincent and all that — I know a lot of my fans know him from "Musicforthemorningafter" — but I wasn't trying to make a record like that. Really, the reason is that I wanted to play with myself, bouncing around in the studio, and Walt is a great partner for that. It's about the approach, not the sound.

How much spontaneity is involved in the studio when you're recording?

That's what it's all about. Every song is different, but typically I'll only have about 80 percent of the song written [when I record], because I know there will be some weird stuff that happens in the studio you can't account for and that will take you somewhere you didn't even expect — I would hate to close myself off to the magic that happens. We set up a situation in all of these studios: there's a guitar station, there's a keyboard station, there's drum station and a drum machine station. And I just go around and can follow along where the song takes me.

You've said that the title of the album is "a reminder to be present" and that the album itself is a contemplation on the past and "how much of it is a blur." What made you want to explore those themes in this album?

It's where I approach every day from. I'm approaching my life that way, my interactions with people that way, and therefore, when I go in the studio I need to approach it that way as well.

Meet Dan Trachtenberg, director of '10 Cloverfield Lane'

A young filmmaker suddenly wound up helming one of the year's biggest (but smallest) films.

@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Director Dan Trachtenberg, right, is seen shooting "10 Cloverfield Lane" with co-star John Goodman. PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Dan Trachtenberg owes "Whiplash" a big thanks. He got the gig directing "10 Cloverfield Lane" — the semi-sequel to 2008's J.J. Abrams-produced alien invasion romp "Cloverfield" — only after Damien Chazelle, one of the writers, decided to make the jazz drummer drama instead.

And so the hotly-anticipated thriller became the 34-year-old Philadelphia native's feature debut. Trachtenberg, a Temple University alum, first caught Hollywood's attention with "Portal: No Escape," a 2011 short that became a viral sensation. "10 Cloverfield Lane" allows him to start small: It's set almost entirely in an underground bunker with only three main characters, trying to stay alive during a massive attack — although they might not be safe down there, either.

How nervous were you on your first big movie?

The first shot we did on was the shot of [Mary Elizabeth Winstead's character] waking up. It starts as a closeup on her face and wraps around her. We had moving walls, so the shot was this crazy choreographed dance, where the camera wrapped around her and the grips had to fly the walls away then bring them back in. We did so many takes. I felt like the audience watching the movie; I was on the edge of my seat, saying, "Please happen, please happen, I'm an idiot for starting out this way." I worried it would set the tone for the whole shoot — "Who's this guy who can't even get a shot done?" We finally did get it, and that was incredibly rewarding.

This is also your first time directing name actors. On top of that they have a lot of dialogue. Your work up to this point hasn't involved either. How did you handle that?

Mary's role is largely nonverbal. She's constantly reacting to things, but always finding a way to be pro-active. I felt excited to tell that very visual story with her. You're always aware what she's thinking. You feel like you're in her shoes. But those scenes with so much dialogue were very new to me. I was intimidated by them, but also excited to execute them. So much of prepping for a movie is logistical and mechanical. It turns out all your favorite conversations happen with actors, because they're all about story and character. That's the stuff you're most concerned with. We all had really high bulls— meters. I really don't like less performy acting. I like grounded performances. And they all felt the same way.

You were also working with J.J. Abrams. How hands-on was he as a producer? How did he help you out?

He was all things. He was shooting "Star Wars" when we were shooting, so he could never be on set. But he was watching all of our dailies and he was sending these awesome emails that were so encouraging. He was constantly involved in the development of the script. He was really influential in terms of the sound of the movie, and for editorial stuff, like keeping up the pace. Pace is so important to him. We were editing at the same time and did reshoots in the same building. It felt like summer camp, but instead of making elbow macaroni and swimming we were making movies together. He likes a homegrown feel, to make it feel like we're all in the backyard together, making movies.

Right now, we're having a major girl power moment — and not just because it's Women's History Month. It's pretty empowering to live in a country where a woman is running for president, single women are the most important voters in the upcoming election and kids finally have a realistic-looking Barbie to play with. But of course it's taken work to get this far, which "Fight Like a Girl: 50 Feminists Who Changed The World" beautifully documents.

Way cooler than any history book, "Fight Like a Girl" gives short profiles of women including Sojourner Truth, Maya Angelou, Ani DeFranco, Margaret Cho, Roxane Gay and Beyonce.

Each profile of an influential woman includes a sketch, quote to live by and rundown of her awesome accomplishments.

Meant to be enjoyable enough for teens and adults to get into, the book educates readers not only about women's rights, but also race and transgender rights, all of which are intertwined.

Let the celebrating continue.

Local literati are flocking to vending machines — and it's not for Tastykakes.

GINA TOMAINE
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Maybe you thought the only thing you could get out of a vending machine was stale prewrapped cake, a bag of Frito-Lays and a feeling of regret. Try a book instead.

The New Yorker just featured a story on "the world's first short-story vending machines" in France, but in Philly we've had them for years. Nic Esposito and Philadelphia nonprofit book publisher The Head & The Hand launched the literature vending machines in 2014 at Elixr Coffee in Rittenhouse Square with rotations around the city, and they're back March 17.

"People are picking up this reactive habit of checking their phones whenever faced with those found moments through out the day — from waiting for a friend in a coffee shop to riding the train," explains Esposito.

"A book available through something as convenient as a vending machine in a coffee shop is, in my opinion, a nice alternative in which to spend those moments."

The idea sprung out of a conversation at a family wedding with a cousin in the vending machine business. Since then, Esposito estimates they have sold thousands of minibooks or "chapbooks," which cost only $2.

"Even though our design and content is unique and beautiful," Esposito says, "these books can be put in your back pocket, thrown in a drawer, or dare I say, put in the recycling.

"Wherever they end up, when I have someone two years later tell me how much they liked Joey Sweeney's 'Bob Marley: The Delaware Years,' it feels great."

Chapbooks are $2 in the vending machine or $3 on Theheadandthehand.com. NIC ESPOSITON

"These books can be put in your back pocket, thrown in a drawer, or dare I say, put in the recycling."
Esposito

The launch of H&H's newest vending machine, and its 2016 Breadbox Chapbook Series, will kick off on St. Patrick's Day at Fishtown cafe Soup Kitchen with hot (we assume cabbage) soup and readings from local author Tim Fitts, Elizabeth Scanlon, an editor at the American Poetry Review and Science Leadership Academy student Michaela Prell.

College students defy stereotypes, pay bills on time

A recent survey found that millennials are managing their finances like pros

While millennials have a lot to learn about managing money, a survey shows a rosy picture of college students who are working, paying their bills on time without their parents' help, avoiding debt and hungry for more knowledge.

The survey by Sallie Mae on how U.S. college students manage their finances found that 77 percent are paying their bills on time and 73 percent of them are doing this on their own. Just over half save money every month.

Sallie Mae, the largest private student loan company, surveyed 800 enrolled college students aged 18-24 in December.

A reluctance to rely on credit may be keeping young adults from piling consumer debt on top of their growing student loans. Only 56 percent said they had a credit card, with an average balance of $906.

Many use debit cards tied to mobile payment services. The most popular is PayPal, which was used by 58 percent of the students, along with 11 percent who used the company's Venmo peer-to-peer payment app. Students also favor Apple Pay and Google Wallet.

"If you learn to monitor your balance, you can see the transactions in real time," said Sallie Mae Chief Marketing Officer Charles Rocha.

Sallie Mae customers, who also can have bank accounts and credit cards with the company, check balances two to three times a day, Rocha said. To that end, millennials are finding out that getting a credit card can help raise their scores, but only if they use the plastic for what they can afford.

Greg McBride, chief financial analyst for Bankrate.com, does not expect mobile payment services or credit card use to interfere with millennials' learning curve over money.

"Twenty years ago, there was a definite advantage to teaching somebody that pain you feel when you part with cold hard cash," McBride said. "But now kids understand numbers on the screen. They don't have to actually see a stack of $100 bills to understand." REUTERS

Is your workplace gender biased?

Do unconscious preferences sway employers more than we think? A new book suggests the answer is yes.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

From the résumés that get noticed to the way workplaces are designed, gender bias plays out in far more subtle — and unconscious — ways than we might think, argues Harvard University behavioral economist Iris Bohnet in her book, "What Works: Gender Equality by Design."

We spoke with Bohnet about why we're all prone to bias, and how companies can level the field.

This is 2016. Many companies have long used diversity training to help achieve equality, so why are our workplaces still so biased?

A very important insight is that we, or our minds, tend to put people into categories. That's just how our minds work. When we see a male kindergarten teacher, for example, or a female engineer, we don't naturally associate those jobs with men or women.

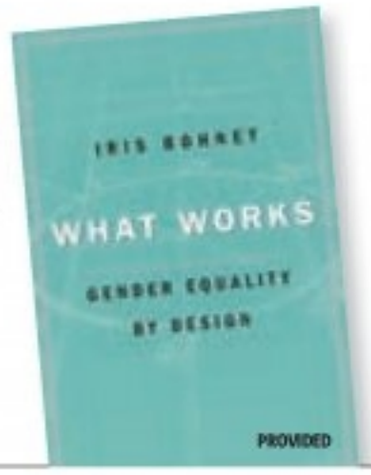
How does unconscious bias affect who gets hired?

Résumés are fraught with bias because they trigger some things we might not be aware of. Sadly enough, research can show that depending on whether the name is male or female, and what racial background the name signals, the likelihood that the person gets a call is significantly affected. In a name, there's very often a lot of stereotyping going on, and it's often unconscious.

What other ways do we see bias play out before a person even gets the job?

Interviews are actually the place we're most concerned about because employers tend to think they have good intuition, but that's where bias kicks in. Even when you ask interviewers what they look for, the answers that they give are actually quite scary. Like, "I just learned that he likes the same football team as I do, he must be a great production editor." Clearly, things that have nothing to do with each other.

You might not be as progressive and unbiased as you think you are. ISTOCK



PROVIDED

How can companies use design features to eliminate bias?

In the '70s, major orchestras in the U.S. introduced curtains and had their musicians audition behind a screen. The likelihood that women would make the next rounds increased by 50 percentage points. The curtains played a very important role in introducing female musicians in to orchestras. This is a design intervention.

How can organizations de-bias the workplace?

There's a lot of research suggesting that role models still matter. Our organizations really have to think about what they have on the walls, and whether it's representative of our employees, or our future employees.

Wily veteran Brand says he'll 'do anything' to help struggling Sixers

Elton Brand's NBA comeback is a selfless and self-fulfilling act rolled into one.

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

It's natural to ask why.

At the age of 37, with plenty of money in the bank and a distinguished career completed, why would you want to come back into the grind of the NBA? Why would you want to join the worst team in the league? Why would you want to subject your body to the physical strain going up against players 15 years younger?

Why?

"I missed it," Elton Brand said.

Simple enough.

The 37-year-old forward finally broke into a recent game against the Miami Heat and in what is now his 17th NBA season. He scored eight points and grabbed four rebounds in 14 minutes for the 76ers

He thoroughly enjoyed being a mentor on this team, which has won only nine games thus far in a massive rebuild under Jerry Colangelo and Sam Hinkie. Helping the young players and being a part of the solution was enticing to Brand, who is truly embracing his role.

"I wanted it to be organic," Brand said. "The opportunity's there for me I didn't want to take Carl Landry's minutes trying to extend his career. I didn't want to take Richaun (Holmes' playing time) trying to prove that he's an NBA player. But now we're fighting for wins and if that's what coach wants, that's who I report to. If that's what he wants, I'm ready."

Elton Bran's second visit to Philly has a slightly different feel to it. GETTY IMAGES

With Jahlil Okafor out for the season and the likes of Robert Covington and Jerami Grant going through concussion protocol, the Sixers desperately need Brand's ability in every way ranging from points and rebounds to leadership.

"I will do anything I can to help them," Brand said. "That's why I'm here. You realize that you may not be as fast, you may not be as athletic, but you can want it. You could just play hard. For now, that's good enough to help. I want to help."

Brand is helping in so many ways.

From setting a proper screen to boxing out for a rebound to communicating on defense, Brand functions as a coach on the court. All of those aspects have been noticeable to coach Brett Brown.

"He's amazing to me because I really didn't know what to expect," Brown said. "I thought he had practiced well, but we practice so infrequently, you're not making that judgment on a high volume of appearances. You're reminded of how good he was because he's so smart. He really knows how to play."

Brand isn't expecting his career to linger into next season. It's about the here and now. Being coaxed briefly out of retirement was not an easy decision.

He's happy and at peace, though. No need to ask why about anything.

"I love the game," Brand said. "I love this franchise. I wanted to help and I could. I'll do all I can."

The No. 1's

Here is a look at the teams deemed as the top in all of college basketball as the tournament begins:

- East Region — North Carolina The 28-6 Tar Heels were dominant down the stretch, winning their rubber match against Duke and triumphing as both the ACC regular season champs and in the conference tournament. They'll play in the Philadelphia Eastern regional if they advance.
- South Region — Kansas The Jayhawks, at 30-4, were the best team in one of the best conferences in the country in the Big 12.
- Midwest Region — Virginia A second No. 1 seed from the ACC, the Cavaliers finished the year at 26-7 and will boast the top billing for the first time in decades.
- West Region — Oregon: The first-ever No. 1 seed for Oregon, they won the Pac-12 and went 28-6. They also controversially beat out Villanova and Michigan State for top spot.

NCAA bracket breakdown: Parity makes 2016 field wide open

Here's a quick, first look at the four regions of this year's NCAA Tournament field.

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

The time has come to pick your losers, watch a bevy of improbable upsets and lose interest in the second weekend after your bracket falls apart.

The 2016 bracket is treacherous and filled with land mines, with parity across the map meaning that almost anything can happen.

Are the No. 1 seeds the favorites, or will a mid-seed catch fire and make an incredible run at a title?

Here is a brief, first-glace breakdown of this year's four regions:

South Region

The South is headlined by No. 1 overall seed Kansas, which faces Austin Peay. But an intriguing matchup will be the No. 8-9 match between Colorado and UConn. These teams have the firepower to pull an upset over the Jayhawks.

Some other talented clubs with Final 4 talent are in the South, with Maryland slated to face South Dakota state as a five-seed and Cal, a four-seed facing Hawaii.

Villanova is the No. 2 seed on the south, a surprising move that will force the Wildcats to chase their postseason hopes away from Philadelphia.

Temple, which survived the bubble, has a tough 10-7 battle against Iowa in the South too. Also keep an eye out for a great play-in matchup between Vanderbilt and Wichita State.

West Region

The Oregon Ducks will have a few challenges in their bracket as well, first and foremost the Baylor Bears (who face Yale) in an intriguing 5-12 matchup.

Grayson Allen and the Duke Blue Devils earned a No. 4 seed and will face another North Carolina team in No. 13-ranked UNC Wilmington and could be bounced by Baylor in Round 2.

A bit further down the bracket, Oklahoma, a squad that had a legitimate chance at a top seed, will play in Oklahoma city against Cal State-Bakersfield. The last team in the top four is Texas A&M.

On upset alert is Texas, which faces always

The Wildcats will face off against UNC Asheville in the first round Friday.

Nova sent south, Temple, St. Joe's dancing

The Wildcats' shocking loss in the Big East tournament cost Villanova more than just a conference title. It could have cost the squad its chance at a national championship.

Villanova will play as a No. 2 seed in the South Region instead of in the East as expected. Had the team been in the Eastern bracket they would play in the Eastern Regional, held at the Wells Fargo Center in Philadelphia.

Nova will face No. 15 UNC Asheville Friday at a time to be announced.

They are joined down south by fellow Big 5 rivals Temple, who will face Iowa as the No. 10 seed in a 10-7 matchup. Temple fans can take a sign of relief that the Owls dodged the curse of having to play in a "first four" game, but the Big 10's Iowa will present TU with a very big challenge.

The fascinating scenario about Nova and Temple is they will face off for the second time this season in Brooklyn, just 90 minutes away.

Last but not least, St. Joes — fresh off an impressive A-10 title earlier Sunday, learned their fate and will also hit the road in the West region in the 8-9 match. As the No. 8 seed will plat the AAC's Cincinnati which made the dance as an at large team.

St. Joe's would have the challenge of taking on the West's No. 1, Oregon, should they advance to the tournament's second weekend. EVAN MACY tournament-tough Iowa State.

East Region

All eyes will be on UNC in the East regional, but tough No. 4 and No. 5 seeds will be eyeing the Tar Heels, winners of the ACC regular season and tournament, as the region marches toward Philadelphia.

No. 5 Indiana, if they thwart Chattanooga, will face Kentucky, the No. 4 seed (if they take care of Stony Brook). Both of these powerhouses could create very interesting matchups against North Carolina.

On the bottom of the Eastern bracket is Xavier, the region's No. 2 and No. 3 West Virginia, both looking to be snipers against the highly-touted Heels. Michigan and Tulsa will play in a play-in fight for No. 11.

Midwest Region

Virginia is the top dog in the final region and will have to watch out for Purdue, the No. 5 seed (which faces Little Rock), and No. 4 Iowa State (facing Iona).

Michigan State learned its fate late in Sunday's selection show, and will star as the No. 2 seed (and will face Middle Tennessee). If they advance, they'll put their Big 10 title to the test against the winner of the 10-7 match between Dayton and Syracuse.

Rounding out the bracket are No. 3 seed Utah (facing Fresno State) and No. 6 Seton Hall (facing No. 11 Gonzaga).

FANTASY HOOPS: DON'T GET YOUR TEAM SHUT DOWN

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM LEVITAN
alevitan@metro.us

Veterans like Carmelo Anthony are threats to be shut down. GETTY IMAGES

The NBA's annual migration to the sidelines has begun.

In the last few days, we've seen the Nets rest Brook Lopez/Thaddeus Young, the Grizzlies play (and win) without four starters and the Sixers be forced to dust off the corpses of Carl Landry/ Elton Brand.

With just one month remaining in the regular season, some teams are focused on tanking and others are focused on the playoffs. Either way, complaining about it isn't going to help. Figuring out how to capitalize will.

Revolving door

Using one roster spot as a revolving door for the final month is important no matter what format you're playing. Instead of hanging on to low-upside fringe guys like E'twaun Moore or Mason Plumlee, we can constantly add new players. The benefits include boosting our games played each week and capitalizing on rest situations. For example, streaming in JaMychal Green and then dumping him for another fill-in when Zach Randolph returns will yield a big profit.

Shutdown candidates

It's a scary time to be holding on to veteran stars on teams that are out of the playoffs. Carmelo Anthony has been banged up for much of the year, Anthony Davis has already missed seven games and the Nets will not be motivated to extend Lopez. If it's too late to trade these players away, get prepared for possible shutdowns during your fantasy playoffs.

Playoff resters

The flip side of the tankers is the playoff resters. Dwyane Wade sat out six April games in 2014, Tim Duncan is a nightly threat to sit even though he surprisingly played in every April game last year and Chris Paul may need a rest after carrying the Blake Griffin-less Clips on his back. There will be situations where we expect to get one game in a week out of a star or we can go to the aforementioned revolving door strategy.

Aries Money matters and contracts look promising. Initiate changes that will bring greater stability to your personal life. Invest in your knowledge, skills and ability to get ahead.

Taurus Trust in your abilities. Don't let anyone take care of your financial or personal affairs. Keep an open mind when it comes to helping others. Offer suggestions.

Gemini Don't make a snap decision if you feel the least bit uncertain. Leave no room for mistakes. Go over every detail personally. An emotional confrontation will lead to regret.

Cancer Try something different. If you have a creative idea, follow it through to the end. Your knowledge and abilities will help you make wise choices when it comes to lifestyle choices.

Leo Remembering past mistakes will help you make better decisions regarding your work and future prospects. You'll have the wherewithal to turn an idea into something tangible.

Virgo Think matters through. Opposition can be expected if you let emotions enter your conversations. Stand tall and avoid getting into battles that solve nothing.

Libra You can make a strategic move that will address a nagging concern. Your motives will shine through, and praise and unexpected rewards will be forthcoming.

Scorpio Make unusual changes to the way you live. Follow an engaging path that will set your creative mind free to follow your dreams. Romance is encouraged.

Sagittarius Take precautions when dealing with loved ones, peers and relatives, or you will end up in an emotional no-win situation. Moderation will be required in all aspects of your life.

Capricorn Concentrate on your health and anything that will lead to your overall improvement. Tackle any bad habits you want to get rid of, and share plans with someone you love.

Aquarius Dealing with institutions will prove difficult. Keep a tight hold on your money and personal documents. Make home improvements that are geared toward a healthy environment.

Pisces Interference will lead to problems with someone. Protect your reputation by keeping your personal business a secret. Someone from your past will comfort you. EUGENIA LAST
